The sinking of the Scorpion has clearly explained by Engineer and Scientist John Craven who was originally in charge of locating her. The ultimate reason was attributed to a torpedo battery failure. This failure also occurred in a Naval Ordnance lab where catastrophic results destroyed a laboratory. The lab issued a recall memo for these batteries however the Scorpion was already at sea. Many parties in the Navy refused to believe this explanation at the time, preferring to support a more colorful and sinister reason. So, Read Blind Man's Bluff !Â The ending in the book does leave you hanging but I suppose that's the story of the USS Scorpion. This book is going to lead me to do a little more digging. Overall, excellent book worth the money. In Scorpion Down, military reporter Ed Offley reveals that the true cause of the Scorpion's sinking was buried by the U.S. government in an attempt to keep the Cold War from turning hot. For five months, the families of the Scorpion crew waited while the Navy searched feverishly for the missing submarine. For the first time, Offley reveals that entire search was cover-up, devised to conceal that fact that the Scorpion had been torpedoed by the Soviets.Â Blind Man's Bluff meets The Hunt for Red October in the shocking untold story of an American submarine torpedoed at the height of the Cold War--and the decades long cover-up that followed.
