It is difficult to arrive at a total number of Khlebnikov's poems. Approximately 650 texts contained in the original Russian editions of the collected and unpublished works (1928-1933 and 1940), as well as in Works (1986) and various periodicals and anthologies, can be considered separate texts, but this number includes many different versions of previously published poems. lengths, meters that varied from line to line in a single poem, variable stanza lengths, irregular rhyme patterns. He made use of patterns and tropes from folklore and from chants, incantations, and shamanistic language. He managed to create an entire poetics in the area of language that the Anglo-American tradition tends to belittle as "play" neologisms, palindromes, riddles, puns.
